

Biodiesel:

Good for America, good for the environment, good for you!

Biodiesel is a diesel fuel that is made from soybean and other oils - not petroleum. It is often blended with petroleum diesel to improve fuel performance. Biodiesel blends work in any diesel engine and help them run smoother and cleaner. Cleaner emissions are better for the environment and better for you. Biodiesel is domestically produced (made in the USA), which helps our country, and is renewable because it is made from crops that we can grow, or renew, each year.

Soybean farmers helped create biodiesel fuel because it helps them sell more soybeans. When soybeans are sold, they are "crushed" into meal and oil. The oil is used for biodiesel and other products, and the meal is used to feed livestock and poultry. Soybean farmers pay a "checkoff" when they sell their soybeans. This checkoff is used for research, marketing and education to benefit the entire soybean industry.
